SECTION A- OBJECTIVES

COMPREHENSION- Passage 1

Read the passages and choose the best answers for the questions

Children, even before they learn to talk, and without having seen anyone else dance, express themselves naturally and joyfully through rhythmic movements. Animals are known to dance. Some birds have actual group dances in clear-cut patterns, with circling, bowing and retreating lines in unison. Primitive man has always danced and in dancing found a means of expressing many of his emotions.

Early man first danced by himself. He found that the repeated rhythmic movements produced a feeling of joy and a 'supernatural' state of mind and emotions. From this he developed an idea of magic power. As mankind developed, religious rituals and ceremonies grew out of the primitive magic dances. Dance thus becomes an important part of many forms of religious worship.

As I stood by a street in Accra that late afternoon watching people rushing home from work, I felt very safe. My sense of security came from the fact that Ghanaians are generally kind and hospitable people, particularly to strangers. Although I had just arrived from my village, I was a Ghanaian and in my own capital I should not fear anything.

Just then, I felt a firm grip on my arm from behind. I did not feel threatened; rather I was relieved. I thought an old schoolmate must have spotted me, James Cudjoe, and decided to play our old game on me. How welcome! The good old days are here again.

I turned to look at the fellow in the face but the more I turned to my left the faster he moved to my right as he tightened his grip on my wristwatch. Suddenly he let go of my arm and bolted. I saw him vanish into the thick crowd. Certainly, this was not how to welcome a friend. People of the city are surely very strange! Totally confused, I made my way towards the lorry park to leave for my brother's house. In the gathering darkness, I tried to find out what time it was. To my utter surprise, I discovered that my wristwatch was gone. The rascal had made away with it. It was hardly new, not even

Passage 3

I was asleep in my room by the time it all started. First of all, a very strong wind began to blow. There was great noise everywhere as the wind tossed trees from one side to the other. Some trees fell head-long in the storm; others had their trunks, branches and leaves blown off and strewn everywhere. Birds sang with sorrow as their nests and young ones were carried away in the wind. Houses were not left out; roofs were blown off them. I heard the thunder booming and saw lightning flashing in the sky. For about fifteen minutes, which lasted like ages, the windstorm raged; then came the rain, pounding heavily on the rooftop. Frightened, I snuggled under my blanket and lay still listening.

It was still raining heavily when I woke up the next morning. Everywhere was flooded; our compound, the road, everywhere. The rain was still so heavy after breakfast that my parents did not allow me to go to school. They insisted I must not leave home until the rain stopped.

We were to have a test that day and I did not want to miss it. All my desperate pleas to be allowed to go fell on deaf ears. Frustrated and angry, I went to the window to watch the rain.

Help! Help! A shrill cry came from the road near our house. A boy was being swept along by the great flood. Men and women rushed out into the rain. Soon strong arms snatched the boy from the rushing flood but not before he had swallowed a large quantity of flood water. It was Sylvester Okeke, my neighbor, dressed for school. As I watched his shivering body and big stomach, I understood why my parents stopped me from going to school. Humbled, I knelt down by that window and thanked God for my parents and my safety.
